NEW GUIDELINES FOR MONITORING BANK SECRECY ACT COMPLIANCE

The FDIC recently revised its 1987 guidelines for monitoring Bank Secrecy Act (BSA) compliance. The revised guidelines also include new BSA examination procedures developed by an interagency working group.

Section 326.8 of the FDIC regulations requires banks to develop and administer a program to assure compliance with the BSA. The compliance program must be in writing, approved by the bank's board of directors...

...the results of the testing.

Designation of an individual(s) responsible for coordinating and monitoring BSA compliance. A senior bank officer should be responsible for overall BSA compliance, along with other individuals designated for day-to-day compliance. A "BSA officer" who reports to a senior officer is not sufficient unless the senior officer is officially charged with overall BSA compliance.

Training for appropriate personnel to include, at a minimum, training of all personnel whose duties require knowledge of the BSA. In addition, an overview of BSA requirements should be given to new employees, and senior officers should be updated periodically on changes and new developments in BSA regulation.

In addition to internal BSA compliance policy, banks are encouraged to develop an effective "know your customer" policy. This policy...

...of customer behavior or activity which may warrant investigation.

A spokeswoman for the bank explains: "We have withdrawn from the bank-to-bank reference system because we believe that it is a breach of confidentiality."

Lloyds justifies its decision...

... competitors Barclays, Midland and Natwest disagree. All say they are reviewing the whole area of banking references , but that they do not believe the new code makes it necessary for them to...

... stop banks providing references, but it states that they must tell customers whether they provide bankers ' references and explain how the system works.

Under the status inquiry system, anyone who wants to check on the creditworthiness of an individual can ask his bank to contact the applicant's bank for guidance. The banks talk to each other in a code which indicates whether the individual is good for the money involved.

Credit...

... on a credit application form is automatically giving consent for a reference to be sought. Bank references are used less often these days because many institutions rely on credit reference agencies to...

...reference for them."

Anthony Sharp, deputy director of the Consumer Credit Trade Association (CCTA), says bank references are still commonly used: "There are numerous shops and finance companies that rely on bank references because they are too small to use credit scoring. There is criticism that, if banks...

...issue. I would expect all the stores that are providing their own credit to use bank references because they don't have access to information that large financial institutions like us have."

Even Sears sometimes uses bank references when an individual requests a high credit limit.

Jillings adds: "Where a self-employed person or small business is applying for credit, we have to use bank references because they may have no accounts we can look at. We also have applications for... customer," he says, "is absolutely outrageous."

The Co-operative bank decided last December to provide bank references only after obtaining the customer's consent. David Cavell, general manager for customer services, says...
